The problem of aging bridges and tunnels

In Japan, as in every other country, bridges and tunnels can become a major problem when they get older. A recent survey by local governments in Japan shows that about one-third of all bridges and tunnels need to be repaired or even removed. It is believed that about 740,000 bridges and tunnels are found all over Japan. About 80 percent were checked over four years, and the work of checking ended in 2017.

Out of the bridges and tunnels which were checked, 580 of them were said to be in a very serious state of disrepair. By the end of 2018, just under half of the bridges had been repaired or work had started on replacing them, while work had not yet started on a little over half of the bridges and tunnels still needing to be repaired.

When local governments were asked why so many bridges and tunnels had not been repaired yet, the answer usually given was that the main problem was that not enough money was available. In the case of the complete removal of a bridge or tunnel, the problem was not money. Local people were very often against the work being done. They complained that there would be traffic jams caused by closure of a bridge or a tunnel for a long time. This was because there were not enough technical staff available to do the work immediately. Another problem was that it was difficult to find other roads in the area which would be free to carry the extra road traffic for a long period of time.

Local governments have a very big responsibility to keep their roads, bridges and tunnels running properly. There is always a small risk of an accident happening or a bridge collapsing. Local governments are also responsible for making their areas as safe as possible. Local government workers are always working very hard to make sure their bridges and tunnels are in good condition, and, as drivers or passengers, we should not forget their hard work.

Narita Airport gets a new electronic customs declaration system.

Have you ever traveled to another country by airplane? It can be a lot of fun, but it takes time when you arrive back in Japan. At the moment when you re-enter Japan at Narita Airport, you have to pass through what is called Passport and Customs control. Customs control means that you have to tell the immigration officer if you have anything which you need to declare. For adults this often means declaring cigarettes or alcohol, but for a young person under 20 years of age it means declaring if you bought anything very expensive in the country where you have been visiting. You may, for instance, have bought a new computer or perhaps a camera, even a new suit. Every item has to be declared to the immigration officer. Anything brought into Japan from another country must be declared because you have to pay importation tax on any purchase above a certain price.

The whole process of going through Customs control does not usually take very long. But if there is a problem with what one traveler wants to bring into Japan from another country, the Customs officer may have to ask questions or even ask for help from his/her colleague.

So, from now onwards the Customs procedures are going to be made more efficient and much faster to go through. Narita Airport will use an electronic declaration system using facial recognition from April 15, 2019. Facial recognition means registering your face in the electronic declaration system. You are asked to look at the facial recognition machine and your face is identified. It works in the same way as showing your passport with the photograph of yourself for the Customs officer to check with your face. First-time visitors to Japan will have photos of their faces taken for future identification.

At first the new electronic system will be used only on Japanese people returning to Narita Airport. Then later this system will be used with non-Japanese people coming into Japan. This new way of speeding up the Customs procedures will be introduced before the overseas visitors come to Japan for the 2020 Tokyo Olympics and Paralympics.

(The Japan News)

問 1 What is the best explanation of “declare” in this case? (paragraph 1)

36

- ① Talking in a loud voice about shopping
- ② Showing what you have bought elsewhere
- ③ Answering questions about another country
- ④ Writing down your name and address

問 2 “Going through Customs” means here... (paragraph 2)

37

- ① Learning the customs of another country
- ② Traveling through another country with a passport
- ③ Telling an official what you have in your bag
- ④ Speaking to an official about a lost suitcase

問 3 When you pay tax on purchases from abroad,

38

- ① you pay tax on whatever is above a certain price.
- ② you pay tax on whatever you have bought below a certain price.
- ③ you pay tax on cigarettes and tobacco only.
- ④ you pay tax on everything you are wearing.

問 4 What is the change to the Customs procedures at Narita Airport? (paragraph 3)

39

- ① Electricity will be used for the first time at the airport.
- ② Facial recognition will no longer be used at the airport.
- ③ Your face will be registered on an electronic system.
- ④ You will need to show your passport photo instead.

問 5 This new facial recognition system

40

- ① will be used on non-Japanese visitors after the Tokyo Olympics.
- ② will be tried out on Japanese travelers at first.
- ③ will be required for non-Japanese travelers only.
- ④ will be used on all travelers after the Tokyo Olympics is over.
